

■ Butterfly GLASGOW

The latest show from Manchester company Quarantine that, as ever, is inspired by the people who make it. In this instance, three generations of a Glasgow family called the Watermans. Quarantine's director, Richard Gregory, who earlier this year was responsible for the wonderful White Trash about the lives of young men from the Manchester area, doesn't believe there should be a distance between the performer and the material they are presenting, resulting in an exceptional level of emotional engagement for audiences. It is like drawing back a curtain on other people's lives and discovering something unexpected, sometimes wondrous and sometimes infinitely sad. LG
